States and Medicaid Expansion

Enacted in 1965 as part of President Johnson's War on Poverty,¹ Medicaid offers federal funding to states to help pregnant women, children, poor families, the elderly, or people who are disabled in obtaining medical care.² To receive federal Medicaid funding, states must comply with conditions set by the federal government.³

In 1982, Arizona became the last state in the country to agree to participate in Medicaid and receive federal funding.⁴ Medicaid funding makes up a large portion of state budgets; in most states, Medicaid funding makes up approximately ten percent of the annual budget.⁵

In 2010, Congress enacted the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA).⁶ Congress sought to require states to expand Medicaid assistance to people who earn less than or equal to 138% of the Federal Poverty Level.⁷ Under the ACA, the federal government would offer states substantial financial assistance to help offset the cost of the increased number of people receiving Medicaid.⁸ Between 2012 and 2016, the federal government would pay 100% of the costs, which would be reduced to 90% by 2020.⁹

As the ACA was originally written, states that refused to expand Medicaid coverage would lose all of their federal Medicaid funding.¹⁰

In 2012, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the ACA Medicaid expansion requirement was too coercive to be constitutional.¹¹ The Court determined that states could voluntarily expand Medicaid, but they could not be required to do

"No longer will young families see their own incomes, and their own hopes, eaten away simply because they are carrying out their deep moral obligations to their parents, and to their uncles, and their aunts."

-Remarks of President Lyndon B. Johnson at the signing in Independence of the Medicare Bill, P.L. 89-97, July 30, 1965¹³

ACA Federal v. State Funding for Expanded Medicaid Enrollees¹⁴

Understanding Medicaid Expansion in the South

As of April 2016, the majority of states — 32 states — have adopted Medicaid expansion.¹ Three states are discussing expansion.² Many of the remaining states that have not expanded Medicaid and not considering doing so are located in the South: Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas. Louisiana plans to expand Medicaid in July 2016, and Alabama is actively considering expansion as part of its section 1115 waiver.

Why does it matter?

In states that have not expanded Medicaid, people remain uninsured because they do not qualify for traditional Medicaid under the states' rules and cannot afford to purchase insurance on the ACA Insurance Marketplace. These people fall into what is called the “coverage gap.”

Who falls in the coverage gap?

The “coverage gap” includes people who do not qualify for traditional Medicaid but earn too little to qualify for insurance subsidies on the ACA Insurance Marketplace. Insurance subsidies (tax credits) are not available for those with incomes below 100% of the federal poverty level ($11,880 in 2016 for a household of one) because the ACA drafters assumed that Medicaid would be available for those in this income bracket. Many immigrants, including those who are undocumented, are in the coverage gap. According to the Kaiser Family Foundation, approximately 90% of people in the coverage gap live in the South.³

Where do people in the coverage gap get health care?

- Community health centers⁴
- Emergency rooms⁵

Many people without insurance or Medicaid forego preventive care and, when they need care, become indebted.⁶

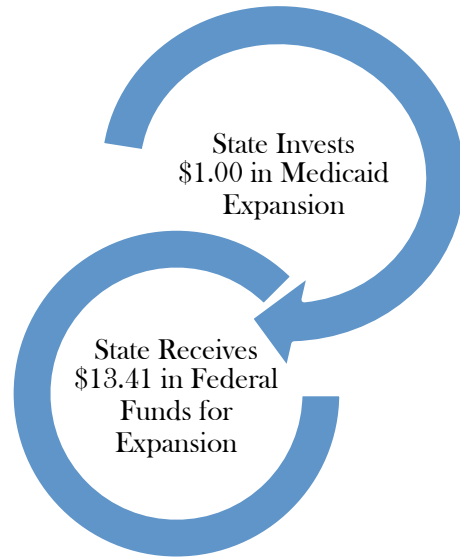

Are there any effects on the states?

Yes. Researchers at the Urban Institute estimated that states not expanding Medicaid would lose billions of dollars of federal aid between 2013 and 2020.⁷

For every $1 a state invests in expanding Medicaid, that state receives $13.41 in federal funds.⁸ The refusal of these federal funds also could cause a state to lose out on economic activity and job growth.⁹

The researchers also estimated that hospitals in non-expansion states would lose millions of dollars per year for uncompensated and charity care.¹⁰

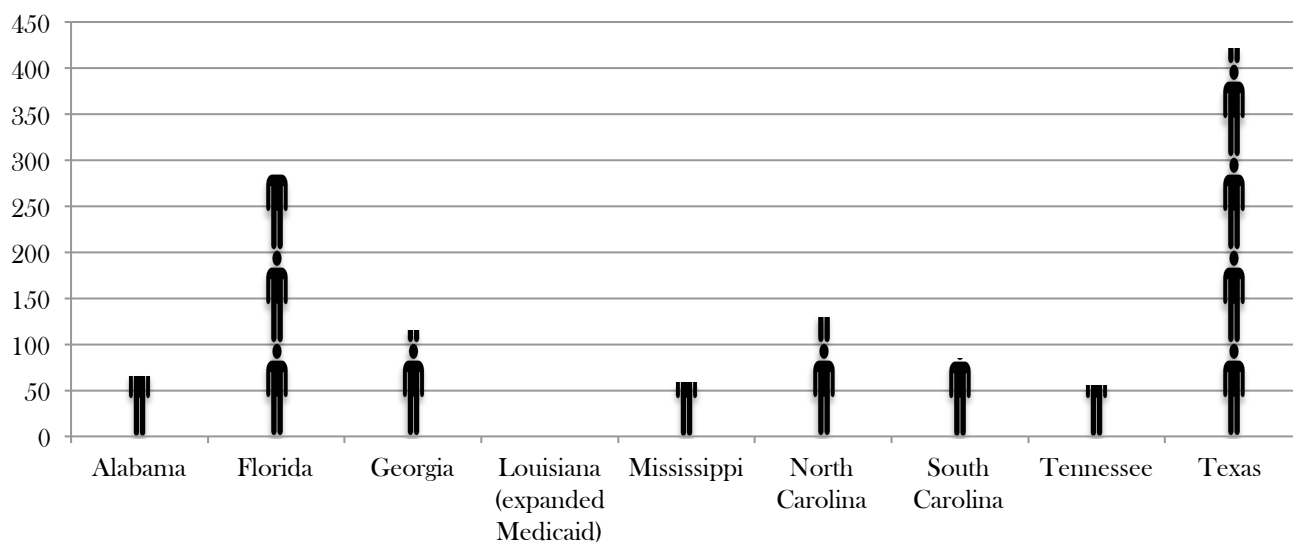

Recent data shows that 11 states that expanded Medicaid—Arkansas, California, Colorado, Kentucky, Michigan, New Mexico, Oregon, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Washington state, and West Virginia—and the District of Columbia experienced job growth in the health sector and saw a reduction in uncompensated care.¹¹ Additionally, the growth of state Medicaid spending in these expansion states was slower than in non-expansion states: in the 11 expansion states, Medicaid spending increased by 3.4%, while spending in non-expansion states increased by 6.9%.¹²

Alabama

Approximately 23% of Alabama's population is uninsured,¹ and almost 140,000 people fall into the coverage gap.² Eligibility for traditional Medicaid is extremely limited. For example, Medicaid in Alabama is available for parents only if they have a household income of 18 percent of the federal poverty level or less ($4,374 for a family of four).³

In late 2015, Governor Robert Bentley organized the Health Taskforce.⁴ The taskforce recommended that Governor Bentley and the Alabama Legislature find a way to provide health insurance for Alabamians who lack coverage.⁵ The recommendation did not specifically call for Medicaid expansion.⁶ But a two page statement attached to the recommendation described benefits that would come with expansion.⁷ The full report is expected to be released in the spring of 2016.⁸

Activists in the state are cautiously optimistic that Alabama will expand Medicaid because of the Health Taskforce's recommendation.⁹

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

Democrats in the Alabama Legislature have called for Medicaid expansion for several years.¹⁷ Governor Bentley has not taken a position on Medicaid expansion or the Health Taskforce's recommendations, but it is expected that he will.¹⁸ The governor is a former physician and is familiar with needs of patients and providers.¹⁹

Governor Bentley has the power to expand Medicaid without legislation.²⁰ But the state's legislature must fund the expanded program.²¹ Legislators may not be willing to finance the expansion of Medicaid because of concerns about the cost of the current traditional Medicaid program.²² Agency officials said in early January 2016 that they need an additional $156 million this year to provide the same services to the more than 1 million current Medicaid enrollees.²³

The Affordable Care Act and Alabama

Between 2013 and 2015, Alabama experienced an estimated 4.7% decrease in the number of uninsured people in the state.²⁴

Between November 1, 2015 and February 1, 2016, 195,055 people in Alabama enrolled in a marketplace plan.²⁵ Alabamians were able to access enrollment information on the Internet. AIDS Alabama, Alabama's federally funded navigator organization, provided in-depth enrollment assistance on its Enroll Alabama website.²⁶ Arise Citizens' Policy Project provided a short informational brochure on their website.²⁷ The Decatur Public Library included on its website three information guides from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services that discussed enrolling in a marketplace plan.²⁸

Alabamians were also able to find in-person enrollment help. Local hospitals and other health organizations held events to encourage enrollment in marketplace plans.²⁹ Several public libraries also held enrollment events.³⁰

Groups Involved in Medicaid Expansion

There are number of coalitions involved in advocacy efforts to expand Medicaid. One coalition is Alabama's Best, which is led by the Alabama Hospital Association.³¹ There are approximately 30 member organizations in Alabama's Best, including³²:

- AIDS Alabama
- Alabama Arise
- Alabama Chapter, American Academy of Pediatrics
- Alabama HIV/AIDS Policy Partnership
- Alabama Primary Health Care Association
- American Heart Association
- Business Council of Alabama
- Greater Birmingham Ministries
- Jefferson County Children's Policy Cooperative
- Mercy Life of Alabama
- National MS Society

Alabama's Best has been heavily involved with Governor Bentley's Health Taskforce.³³

Florida

Approximately 17% of Florida's population is uninsured, and almost 570,000 people fall in the coverage gap.¹ More than 70% of the people who fall into the coverage gap work part-time or full-time for small employers who do not offer health insurance benefits.² Many work for the hospitality and service, administration and management, and retail industries.³

Medicaid enrollment is highly restricted in Florida.⁴ Only low-income children, extremely low-income parents, pregnant women, and disabled adults are eligible for Medicaid.⁵ As is true in all states that have not expanded Medicaid, non-disabled adults without dependent children are ineligible for Medicaid, regardless of their income.⁶

Given the state's conservative political climate, advocates do not believe that Medicaid will be expanded in Florida in 2016 or 2017.⁷

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

Florida House Republicans voted to reject a Senate plan to expand Medicaid in June 2015.¹⁵ Legislators asserted that the expansion was too costly.¹⁶

In 2015, U.S. Rep. Corrine Brown (D., FL 5th District) unsuccessfully campaigned in Central Florida to put Medicaid expansion on the ballot.¹⁷ Supporters failed to collect the 683,149 signatures needed to qualify for the November 2016 ballot.¹⁸

The Affordable Care Act and Florida

Between 2013 and 2015, Florida experienced an estimated 6.4% decrease in the number of uninsured people in the state.¹⁹

Between November 1, 2015 and February 1, 2016, 1,742,819 people in Florida enrolled in a marketplace plan.²⁰ The University of South Florida received a 2015 CMS Navigator Grant to provide state-wide enrollment assistance.²¹ Groups such as Planned Parenthood assisted with enrollment throughout the State.²² Cities in South Florida experienced a growth of storefront sign-up locations run by insurance agents and brokers.²³ In Miami, residents of the Sant La Haitian Neighborhood could receive help from an enrollment counselor with the nonprofit Epilepsy Foundation of Florida.²⁴ Florida led the nation in the total number of residents who signed up for a marketplace plan.²⁵

Georgia

Approximately 16% of Georgia's population is uninsured, and almost 305,000 people fall in the coverage gap.¹

There have been many discussions about trying to reform the state's primary healthcare to expand coverage.² Given the state's conservative political climate, advocates do not believe that Medicaid will be expanded in Georgia in 2016.³

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

The Georgia House Democratic Caucus announced a Medicaid expansion bill, called the Expand Medicaid NOW Act in January 2016.¹¹

In response, Georgia Governor Nathan Deal announced that he would continue to oppose efforts to expand Medicaid in the state because of high costs he asserts are associated with expansion.¹² Governor Deal stated that the state would need to spend $2.1 billion “just to turn in the paperwork.”¹³

The Affordable Care Act and Georgia

Between 2013 and 2015, Georgia experienced an estimated 5.5% decrease in the number of uninsured people in the state.¹⁴

Between November 1, 2015 and February 1, 2016, 587,845 people in Georgia enrolled in a marketplace plan.¹⁵ Georgia Legal Aid provided online information about enrolling in marketplace plans.¹⁶ Additionally, people could receive in-person enrollment help. Health Care Central Georgia dba Community Health Works received a 2015 CMS Navigator Grant to provide statewide enrollment assistance.¹⁷ Insure Georgia partnered with Cancer Coalitions of Georgia, Morehouse School of Medicine, Emory University, the Northwest Georgia Healthcare Partnership, and multiple hospitals and health systems throughout the state to assist Georgians with obtaining affordable health care.¹⁸

Louisiana

Approximately 15% of Louisiana's population is uninsured.¹ In January 2016, newly elected Louisiana Governor John Bel Edwards signed an executive order expanding Medicaid coverage in the state, which will eliminate the coverage gap.² The expansion goes into effect on July 1, 2016.³

In 2015, the Legislature passed a statute—crafted by the Louisiana Hospital Association—that allows hospitals to pool their funds into a state operated fund to be used as part of the state's contributions for an expanded Medicaid program.⁴

Only two other Southern states, Arkansas and Kentucky, have expanded Medicaid.⁵

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

Louisiana Republicans have historically opposed Medicaid expansion, but they recently softened their stance.¹³ However, in January 2016, Representative Alan Seabaugh of Shreveport, a Republican and one of the most conservative House members, said he was intending to start an effort to block Governor Edwards's Medicaid expansion plan, but he did not give details.¹⁴

The conservative group Americans for Prosperity issued a news release following Governor Edwards' expansion order, condemning it as a "policy move that won't end well for Louisiana."¹⁵

"By July 1, we expect more than 300,000 hard-working citizens will have the comfort and security of health coverage . . . This will not only afford them peace of mind, but also help prevent them from slipping further into poverty and give them a fighting chance for a better life."

Between 2013 and 2015, Louisiana experienced an estimated 6.0% decrease in the number of uninsured people in the state.¹⁷

Mississippi

Approximately 15% of Mississippi's population is uninsured,¹ and about 100,000 people fall in the coverage gap.² The coverage gap is widened by economic and political factors.³ The local economy is dominated by small businesses, which do not offer insurance benefits.⁴ Mississippi has one of the most restrictive traditional Medicaid eligibility requirements in the United States.⁵ Parents must earn less than 22% of the Federal Poverty Level to enroll (about $462/month for a family of four).⁶ As is true in all states that have not expanded Medicaid, non-disabled adults without dependent children may not receive Medicaid, regardless their income.⁷

Many Mississippi politicians remain committed to opposing Medicaid expansion.⁸

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

In 2013, under the leadership of Governor Phil Bryant, Senate Republicans rejected an expansion plan that would have extended Medicaid to 300,000 people.¹⁶ House Republicans rejected a similar plan.¹⁷ Governor Bryant and state Republican legislators have continued to oppose the expansion of Medicaid in the state.¹⁸

“For us to enter into an expansion program would be a fool’s errand. I mean, here we would be saying to 300,000 Mississippians, ‘We’re going to provide Medicaid coverage to you,’ and then the federal government through Congress or through the Senate, would do away with or alter the Affordable Care Act, and then we have no way to pay that. We have no way to continue the coverage.” –Governor Bryant, interview with the Associated Press, January 1, 2014¹⁹

North Carolina

Approximately 13% of North Carolina's population is uninsured,¹ and 244,000 people fall into the coverage gap.² If North Carolina were to expand Medicaid, 500,000 people would be eligible for coverage, and expansion could help an additional 144,000 children gain coverage.³ Participants in the annual "Moral March" on the state capital have included Medicaid expansion in their advocacy agenda.⁴

Republican politicians in North Carolina, particular Senate leadership, have historically opposed Medicaid expansion.⁵ In 2013, the General Assembly passed S.L. 2013-5, which prohibits expansion without legislative approval.⁶ Some are advocating for expansion to be included in the section 1115 waiver that the state will be seeking to convert its traditional Medicaid program to a managed care model.⁷

Yet, given the political climate, and the difficulty of expanding Medicaid while at the same time privatizing traditional Medicaid, advocates do not believe that North Carolina will expand Medicaid in the 2016 legislative session.⁸

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

The North Carolina General Assembly historically has been reluctant to expand Medicaid, as demonstrated by its passage of S.L. 2013-5 in 2013.¹⁶ At a town hall meeting in Winston-Salem in January 2016, Rep. Donny Lambeth (R., Winston-Salem) said there was some recent discussion in Raleigh about expanding Medicaid.¹⁷ But with a complicated Medicaid reform process just getting underway, there is little chance of expansion getting through the General Assembly in the 2016 legislative session that begins in late April.¹⁸

North Carolina Governor Pat McCrory has said he opposes expansion unless he can secure waiver exceptions for what he has called “a North Carolina plan, and not a Washington plan.”¹⁹

The Affordable Care Act and North Carolina

Between 2013 and 2015, North Carolina experienced an estimated 6.0% decrease in the number of uninsured people in the state.²⁰

An Affordable Care Act Enrollment Fair was held at the Salisbury Civic Center.²³ Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina held an open enrollment event at Pitt Community College in Greenville.²⁴ Harris Regional Hospital held an open enrollment event in its lobby.²⁵ The Opportunities Industrialization Center’s Family Medical Center provided enrollment counseling in Rocky Mount.²⁶ The Affordable Healthcare Coalition of Robeson County also assisted with ACA enrollment.²⁷ The Duke Health Justice Clinic provided enrollment guidance to those living with HIV.²⁸

South Carolina

Approximately 13% of South Carolina’s population is uninsured.¹ Seventeen percent of the population lives below the federal poverty level.²

Forty-eight percent of the state’s total uninsured population—about 123,000 people—would be eligible for Medicaid if the state were to expand the program.³ About 26,700 are military veterans and their spouses. Many are between 50 and 64 years of age.⁴

The state’s leadership remains opposed to expanding Medicaid.⁵ Because of this political climate, advocates do not believe that Medicaid will be expanded in the foreseeable future.⁶

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

South Carolina Democrats have pushed for Medicaid expansion, while the Republican-controlled Legislature remains opposed.¹⁴ Democratic Senator Joel Lourie (D., Richland) and Senator Ray Cleary (R., Georgetown) filed Senate Bill 845¹⁵ to establish “Health SC,” a private option form of Medicaid.¹⁶ As of March 2016, the bill was in the Senate Committee on Finance.¹⁷

South Carolina Governor Nikki Haley opposes Medicaid expansion.¹⁸ “We will not expand Medicaid on President Obama’s watch. We will not expand Medicaid ever.” –Governor Haley, March 30, 2013¹⁹

The Affordable Care Act and South Carolina

Between 2013 and 2015, South Carolina experienced an estimated 6.4% decrease in the number of uninsured people in the state.²⁰

Tennessee

Approximately 13% of Tennessee's population is uninsured,¹ and almost 120,000 people fall in the coverage gap.²

Tennessee's reluctance to expand Medicaid is partially the result of its previous experience with expanding its traditional Medicaid program.³ In 1994, the state privatized TennCare, its Medicaid program.⁴ In exchange for privatizing TennCare, the state expanded Medicaid coverage to cover people who were uninsured because of the high cost of insurance or their preexisting conditions.⁵ In the late nineties, the state eliminated coverage for people who were uninsured because of rising costs.⁶ The program continued to provide coverage for people with preexisting conditions, which caused the cost of the program to continue to rise.⁷ Because of the high cost of this expanded coverage, the state eliminated coverage for people with preexisting conditions in 2005.⁸

Advocates are hopeful that expansion will happen after the current election cycle, in 2017.⁹

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

In 2015, Governor Bill Haslam, a Republican, proposed a market-based plan to expand Medicaid, called Insure Tennessee.¹⁶ The plan would have included copayments and “personal responsibility” components similar to those in employer-based insurance.¹⁷

Governor Haslam called a special legislative session to consider Insure Tennessee.¹⁸ The plan was rejected by the Senate in committee.¹⁹ Governor Haslam then brought the plan to the Legislature’s regular session.²⁰ Insure Tennessee was again defeated in committee.²¹ Leadership in the legislature was divided. Senate Majority Leader Mark Norris (R., Collierville) would not sponsor the resolution on Governor Haslam’s proposal.²² Majority Leader Gerald McCormick (R., Chattanooga) sponsored the resolution, but House Speaker Beth Harwell (R., Nashville) never clearly came out for or against the proposal.²³ House Republican Caucus Chair Glen Casada (R., Franklin) firmly opposed the proposal.²⁴

Many Republican lawmakers have not opposed or promoted Medicaid expansion since Insure Tennessee’s defeat.²⁵ They face pressure from the Tea Party to oppose the plan, while facing pressure from the business sector to pass it.²⁶

The Affordable Care Act and Tennessee

Between 2013 and 2015, Tennessee experienced an estimated 3.8% decrease in the number of uninsured people in the state.²⁷ Between November 1, 2015 and February 1, 2016, 268,867 people in Tennessee enrolled in a marketplace plan.²⁸ Tennessee residents were able to receive assistance and/or information about plans from Enroll America,²⁹ the Tennessee Department of Commerce & Insurance,³⁰ and Get Covered Tennessee.³¹ Enrollment events were also held throughout the state.³²

Groups Involved in Medicaid Expansion

The Coalition for a Healthy Tennessee supported Governor Haslam’s proposal for expanding Medicaid.³³ Coalition members included³⁴:

- AARP
- Interdenominational Ministers Fellowship
- Tennessee Business Roundtable and chambers of commerce
- Tennessee Hospital Association
- League of Women Voters
- Health care providers
- Other organizations interested in improving the health of Tennesseans.

The coalition’s activities largely ended with the defeat of Governor Haslam’s plan.³⁵ The Tennessee Center for Justice has been working to renew support for the plan.³⁶ The Center has held town hall meetings across the state, written op-eds and letters to the editor, and conducted petition campaigns.³⁷

The Center is gathering old keys to represent the state’s uninsured population to send to House Speaker Beth Harwell to remind her that her leadership is “key.”³⁸ The Center does not believe it can pass Insure Tennessee without greater support, but it hopes that it can keep the issue at the forefront of Tennessee politics and in the thoughts of the people, legislators, and media.³⁹

In April 2016, partly in response to this advocacy, Speaker Harwell announced the establishment of a task force charged with developing a plan for pilot programs to reform Medicaid based on “conservative ideas.”⁴⁰ Whether the plan meets the enrollment and coverage goals intended for Medicaid expansion and/or will be approved by CMS remain to be seen.

Texas

Approximately 19% of the Texas population is uninsured,¹ and 766,000 people fall in the coverage gap.² State legislators have proposed expanding Medicaid every legislative session since the Affordable Care Act was passed in 2010.³ Local organizations and politicians have supported these proposals.⁴ For example, in 2015, a Harris County judge joined with a Dallas County judge to advance Medicaid expansion proposals.⁵ Despite this support, all attempts to expand Medicaid have been defeated.⁶

Texas's hesitation in expanding Medicaid stems from its conservative political climate.⁷ The Texas legislature is comprised of Tea Party and Libertarian members who oppose increasing state spending.⁸

Advocates are hopeful that the political environment of the state will begin to change during the next election cycle, which would create opportunities for Medicaid expansion.⁹

What Politicians Are Saying About Medicaid Expansion

The Texas State Legislature has historically opposed Medicaid expansion.¹⁷ The legislature has only moved ideologically further to the right since previous battles over the issue.¹⁸ This year, Senate Republicans stood with Lt. Governor Dan Patrick to announce that they would not expand Medicaid.¹⁹

Texas Governor Greg Abbott opposes Medicaid expansion.²⁰ “Medicaid expansion is wrong for Texas” -Governor Greg Abbott, April 20, 2015²¹

The Affordable Care Act and Texas

Between 2013 and 2015, Texas experienced an estimated 4.7% decrease in the number of uninsured people in the state.²²

Between November 1, 2015 and February 1, 2016, 1,306,208 people in Texas enrolled in a marketplace plan.²³ Texas added 20 hours of state-prescribed training for federal navigator certification, which discouraged some non-profits from getting involved in ACA enrollment.²⁴ Despite this, enrollment events were held throughout the state. Several organizations in the state, including Community Council of Greater Dallas, East Texas Behavioral Healthcare Network (ETBHN), and South Plains Community Action Association, Inc., received 2015 CMS Navigator Grants to provide enrollment assistance.²⁵ University Health System’s CareLink provided an enrollment event at the hospital’s Robert B. Green Campus for Bexar County residents.²⁶ The Daughters of Charity Services of San Antonio provided enrollment consultations at the DePaul Family Center and several public libraries for residents of Bexar, Atascosa, Wilson, Karnes, and DeWitt counties.²⁷ Enrollment fairs were held in McAllen at the Weslaco EDC and in San Juan at La Union del Pueblo Entero.²⁸ The Parkland Health and Hospital System also offered ACA enrollment help.²⁹ The Community Healthcare Center in Wichita Falls said that counselors assisted 1,080 people during the enrollment period.³⁰

Groups Involved in Medicaid Expansion

In Texas, interest groups have informally organized in support of Medicaid expansion.³¹

The Metro 8 Chambers of Commerce is one such group.³² The Metro 8 represents the business sectors of the eight largest metropolitan cities in Texas: Arlington, Austin, Corpus Christi, Dallas, El Paso, Fort Worth, Houston, and San Antonio.³³

The Texas Medical Association, the Texas Organization of Rural and Community Hospitals (TORCH), and the Texas Hospital Association, and others that are involved in direct service and care support Medicaid expansion.³⁴

A number of the state specialty physician associations have independently supported expansion efforts.³⁵

Health and Human Services collaborative organizations are working on a grassroots level to expand Medicaid.³⁶
